DETROIT — Vice President George Bush, the Republican e for president, has said that if elected he will work to reduce acid rain, speed the cleanup of toxic wastes, strengthen the en-forcement of federal pollution reg-ulations and bring a new "conservation ethic" to the White House.

Attempting to separate himself from President Ronald Reagan on environmental issues, Mr. Bush said Wednesday that he would end ocean dumping by 1991, set a goal of "no net loss of wetlands," prevent offshore oil drilling in sensitive areas and call an international conference to discuss global warming and ozone depletion during his through in the flavor of the speech,

Cambodia Talks: China Upbeat Over Progress

By Daniel Southerland

Washington Post Service
BELIING — China and the Soviet Union ended Thursday five days of talks on resolving the Cambodia conflict on an unexpectedly positive note, having found what a Chinese spokesman described as some 'common ground."

The outcome appeared to leave many questions unresolved, but it also seemed to increase the chances that a Chinese-Soviet summit meeting would take place next year, as many observers predict.

Jin Guihua, a spokesman for China's Foreign Ministry, said at a regular weekly news briefing Thursday that the talks between Chinese and Soviet vice foreign ministers were "beneficial" and "promoted the mutual understanding of the two sides."

Mr. Jin said that four lengthy sessions had focused on the Cambodia issue, and especially the question of a complete withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia as soon as possible. In the past, the Soviets had refused to discuss the matter, saying that a troop withdrawal was Vietnam's affair and should be discussed with the Vietnamese, not the Soviets.

The Chinese spokesman described the atmosphere in the talks sames the amosphere in the takes as "business-like, frank, and pragmatic." The addition of the positive-sounding word "pragmatic" was something new, a Western diplomat said.

During the meetings, Mr. Jin said, both sides stood for a "fair and reasonable settlement" and expressed a willingness to do their best to attain it.

By Joel Brinkley New York Times Service JERUSALEM - When Israeli schools reopen soon, bus drivers in the occupied West Bank will be armed and ready.

A traveling team of "crisis management experts," as they call themselves, is training groups of Israeli drivers to keep from flinching if Palestinians throw stones at their windshields. They are also being armed with pistols, Uzi subma-chine guns and M-16 rifles, and trained to whip out their weapons, open the bus door and shoot particularly troublesome assailants before they endanger the Israeli children on board.

While the bus drivers ready themselves for the school year on the West Bank, where Israeli vehicles are subjected to stone-throwing by local Palestinians almost daily, an increasing number of ordinary motorists are equipping their cars with windows made to deflect stones and resist firebombs.

Motorists are using a variety of other exotic devices, as well, to repel protesters. One company is selling built-in sprayers that squirt people outside a car with a mixture of noxious onion-juice gas.

The unusual measures being taken to protect vehicles were recorded last week by Israeli television. which filmed one of the training sions for school-bus drivers at the settlement of Tel Chaim, near Nablus. On that day, the drivers were learning how to dodge stone roadblocks that protesters often throw onto roads in the West Bank.

The trainers used plastic highway pylons to simulate the barriers. and the drivers wove their buses on a test track. The security experts said it is around the obstacles like race cars important to avoid flinching if a rock is thrown at the windshield, whether or not the glass is bulletproof (as it is on some buses). Drivers who blink or wince might jerk the steering wheel and force their buses off the road, the experts said.

So each driver sat behind the wheel of his vehicle and tried to keep his eyes wide open as yellow tennis balls were hurled at the windshield in front of his face. Later, the drivers were shown how to evacuate a bus in case of a firebomb attack. They were told to hang from the overhead luggage rack and knock the windows out with their feet. The children should be directed out of the bus before the driver leaves, the experts said. As they attempted to perform the exercise, one driver with a paunch got stuck trying to squeeze through the window frame.

Finally, the drivers had target practice. Black cardboard cutouts representing Palestinian attackers were set up on either side of the buses. Drivers were told to use their ated Press reported from Jerusaweapons only as a last resort. Soviets Rebuff Demand Over Radar

WASHINGTON (WP) - The Soviet Union has rejected U.S. de. mands in Geneva that a partly constructed radar in south-central Asia be dismantled, U.S. officials say. The rejection, after the United States made its demand Wednesday, had been expected.

The officials said it was unknown whether President Ronald Reagan would now respond by repudiating U.S. obligations under the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which bars the deployment of sophisticated missile defenses. The administration threated Wednesday to declare the Soviet Union in "material breach" of the treaty if the radar were not taken down. The administration has long asserted that the radar violates the ABM treaty because the installation is situated near the city of Krasnoyarsk, in the south-central part of the Soviet Union, instead of on the nation's periphery. The Americans contend that large inland radars could be used to coordinate a defense of Soviet missile siles or other military installa-

TRAVEL UPDATE

Air Fare Cuts Don't Signal Price War

WASHINGTON (WP) — The fare cuts announced Tuesday by several major airlines do not signal a return to the widespread price-cutting of the early 1980s, industry analysts say, and the price of some discount seats

The cuts announced by Texas Air Corp.'s Continental Airlines and Eastern Airlines involved a small number of flights and carry restrictive terms. The reductions were intended to fill seats as the travel season enters a slow period with the end of summer. In response to Texas Air's move, several major airlines began offering so-called companion fares, in which passengers buying a round-trip discount ticket can buy anothly one on the same flight for $158. Continental and United Airlines also reduced some fares on flights originating in Denver, where each has a Industry analysts said the new cuts were not deep or broad enough to bring about major changes in market share among the big carriers, or to oring about major changes in market share among the big carriers, or we set off widespread price-cutting. In addition, because of fare increases announced last week, the rates for some discount tickets rose Thursday. A record 15.4 million overseas visitors to Britain spent £6.2 billion ($10.4 billion) last year in the country's best year for tourism to date, the British Tourist Authority said Thursday.

Scientists previously suspected that hereditary predisposition plays a role in some colon cancers. Last year, scientists in Britain reported strong evidence of a genetic defect that contributes to the development of some colon cancers.

Pinochet Merits Defeat

President Augusto Pinochet, Chile's dic-tator since 1973, now asks voters to extend his term until 1997 by voting "yes" in an October plebiscite. He is given a fair chance of winning, in what many opponents expect to be an honest ballot, despite his regime's record of terrorism and abuse of liberties. This record merits his defeat. But democrats need to absorb the lessons of the wide voter appeal he now seems to enjoy.

For better and for worse, General Pinochet has changed Chile. After some false starts, his economic team has managed to transform a sluggish economy into one of Latin America's few success stories, based on private investment, open trade and product diversification. This change would not have gone so far so fast had not his economists been backed by the regime's dictatorial powers. Reform attempts in such democracies as Argentina, Brazil and Ecuador continue to falter.

Even General Pinochet's opponents now favor building on the strengths of the existing economic model. Yet that model has also left behind large numbers of the urban poor. The political price has been appalling. The yes no plebiscite is far from a democratic choice between political alternatives. It was designed to pose a stark choice between General Pinochet and the unknown. Yet especially if the no vote prevails, transition to democracy can begin.

Even a victory for General Pinochet would lead to dissolution of the junta and congressional elections. A no vote would set up an open contest for the presidency next year. Last week, the state of emergency was lifted — providing, at least for the election period, greater personal and political freedom than Chileans have known for 15 years. After the traumas of the Allende and Pinochet years, Chileans are sharply divided over questions of political order, economic distribution and social change. With the latest economic gains, the terms of the debate have begun to shift away from the left-right axis to one dividing modernizers from those nostalgic for the past. The outcome of free

economy continued to do well last year: the poor did not. The unemployment rate was down, real median family and per-capita income both were up - yet the poverty rate remained essentially unchanged at 13.5 percent. The current expansion is more than five years old, and 32.5 million people conrique to live below the poverty line - more than a seventh of the population. You would not know it from the presidential campaign, but trickle-down is not working.

Both parties have hyped the poverty figures in recent years. When the rate was rising in early 1980s, the Democrats blamed the Reagan budget cuts; they made it part of the fairness issue. When it started down in 1984, the Republicans used it to prove the contrary proposition - that poverty did not depend on social spending but on economic growth, which they claimed the same budget cuts had fostered. The Democrats overstated the importance of social programs: the rate started up (from a recent low of 11.4 percent in 1978 to a high of 15.2 in 1983) with the high inflation and recession of the Carter years. The Republicans likewise overstated the efficacy of benign neglect, as these latest figures show. The society has always been less equitable than most Americans believe. Now it also seems to be less equitable than it used to be.

The richest two-fifths of families now have the highest share of total income (67.8 percent) and the poorest two-fifths the lowest (15.4 percent) in the 40 years the Census Bureau has compiled such statistics. The poverty rate is not merely high for this point in the business cycle. It masks important differences between groups. The rate last year went down for whites (to 10.5 percent) but up for blacks (to 33.1 percent). For the elderly it was lower than for the society as a whole, but for children, much higher. A fifth of all children are now poor, and two-fifths of the poor are children. The rate for younger children is higher. Of black children under 6 years of age, 49 percent lived in poverty last year. Of white children un-

According to the government of Burundi, at least 5,000 people have been killed in the uprising of Hutus, who make up 85 percent of the population. President Pierre Buyoya, has suggested that even more have been killed, and this assertion seems to have been borne out by news service reports. In 1972, when the majority Hutus attempted to overthrow the Tutsidominated government, some 10,000 Tutsis were killed. In retaliation, the Tutsis killed more than 100,000 Hutus. Since 1972, several less horrendous ethnic clashes have occurred.

AIDS: Costs and Profits

A year's supply of AZT, the only drug with some efficacy against the AIDS virus, costs a patient $8,000. A U.S. federal grant to the states is available for those who cannot afford it. But the grant ends in September, leaving uninsured patients with a choice, They can stop taking AZT, or spend themselves into poverty, with assets worth less than $3,100, qualifying them for Medicaid.

The federal grant has little chance of being renewed, and states are not rushing to make good the shortfall. That focuses attention on the immediate cause of the crisis. the price of AZT, said to be the highest ever charged for a drug. The cost is personally devastating to those who must spend down to poverty, but the burden of paying for AZT in the end is borne by everyone through higher taxes and insurance costs.

Burroughs Wellcome, the manufacturer, says that AZT is unusually expensive to make and that the company has "committed more than $80 million" to developing the drug. But some of the $80 million involves contracts for future supplies, not money actually spent. In any case, the cost of bringing the average drug to market is far higher — $125 million.

Burroughs did have a good reason for charging a high initial price, but the reason is no longer valid. When AZT was introduced, in March 1987, other and maybe better AIDS drugs were expected imminently. The company feared it would have limited time to earn back its investment. But the competitors have not materialized and the market for AZT is booming. In December, Burroughs cut the price so as to reduce the annual cost to patients from $10,000 to $8,000.

Does $8,000 still represent an unreasonable profit? Only Burroughs knows, since it refuses to discuss the costs. But some general principles apply. One is that drug companies should be allowed every incentive to develop effective drugs, especially to combat AIDS. Burroughs took a chance on AZT; why shouldn't its reward be to charge whatever the market will bear?

Perhaps because of another principle, that profit should be related to risk. Burroughs did not bear the full risk of developing AZT from scratch. The chemical was synthesized in 1964 by Jerome Horwitz, a researcher supported by the National Cancer Institute, a government body. His hope was that AZT would work against cancer.

Its effectiveness against the AIDS virus was shown in 1985 by the National Cancer Institute's Samuel Broder. He developed a special screening system and tested AZT at Burroughs's request. But by the time the government thought of applying for a patent on the drug it had invented and tested, it found that Burroughs had done so first.

AZT is the only drug that offers clear benefit to people with AIDS. Burroughs has earned a generous profit for its contribution. It took the risk of paying for manufacture and testing at a time when AZT's privilezed position seemed likely to be short-lived. But that is considerably less risk than the patent system is designed to reward - that of developing a drug independently.

A drug company should not usually have to justify its profit, but AZT is a special case. The government made major contributions to its development. Burroughs Wellcome is a subsidiary of a charitable trust whose founder, Sir Heary Wellcome, directed that earnings be used for research to improve the physical condition of mankind. He would surely be horrified to learn that people were being forced to sell their homes and property in order to meet his company's price for a life-prolonging drug. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

In the Teflon Tradition

It should not be long until the press discovers that it may have another Teflon politician on its hands: Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle. Before reporters start shaking their heads in bewilderment, however, they might review their own contribution. They passed raucous judgment on him in the form of accusatory questions rather than allowing the public to make up its own mind. They made themselves the issue as much as Mr. Quayle, playing into the hands of their critics.

Somewhere along the line, the press has taken upon itself the role of inquisitor and even accuser. Pat Buchanan, the conservatives' top press-basher, has observed that reporters were acting like an attack group

The "new and innovative ways" to use defense resources should result in a plan whereby the allied military posture is adjusted to fit the strategic equation of the future. Since there is no question of Warsaw Pact force reductions until the conventional stability negotiations have progressed, the allies must maintain and improve greater commonality and standard-ization of equipment and in due course reshape the highly fragmented European weapons industries, with major savings. Both steps would lead not only to a more efficient alliance but to a far more integrated Europe. Since this is the declared aim of the Europeans, such steps should be supported by the European Community. With a clear plan, NATO would go into the conventional stability negotiations in a strong position. At the same time, the military burden would remain stable and cause fewer problems. Most importantly, the feeling of common purpose would become considerably stronger.

(This is the Dukakis staff's favorite.)

2. Never Love a Stranger theory. The new man professing centrist views was subject to attack as a secret liberal and closet Carterite. The change came with the Pledge of Allegiance (patriotism-impugning issue): Mr. Bush assailed Mr. Dukakis's veto of a Massachusetts law that would have required teachers to lead their classes in the pledge to the flag. And with the furlough - regarding Mr. Dukakis's program in Massachu-setts under which convicts were released from overcrowded prisons, including one who later committed murder which more legitimately questioned Mr.
Dukakis's stand on punishment. (The Bush staff if pushing this conjecture.)
3. Snotty Elitist Wise-Guy Media

Backlash theory. Serves 'em right, the lefty hypocrites, which is explained by its intemperate but heartfelt title. My own suspicion is that the Democratic convention in July came across on television as being dominated by Mr. Jackson and his legions of admirers, while the Republican convention in August was vanilla ice cream on white bread — culturally majoritarian and nonthreatening, but backed by a don'tlet-them-take-prosperity-away threat and a weakness-leads-to-war warning.

The Democratic orations said, "Trust us, we have families, we salute flags, we're just like you" but the relentless picture on the television was saying. "We're not you at all"; the Republican orations said, "We're the true party of kind and gentle change," but the picture was saying. "We are you and not them."

Which brings us to what we can hope is the nadir of the campaign. Mr. Bush has come off the floor with an uncharac-"Reagan Democrats" by flag-waving — making an issue of the Pledge of Allegiance (and inferentially, school prayer)

— and slyly suggesting that a concern for civil liberties is un-American. In response, Mr. Dukakis is giving up his arrogant Massachusetts Rose Garden strategy. He is clearly where Mr. Bush was a month ago: on the defensive, needing to come out of hiding to "define himself" — to explain where he stands. (That led Mr. Bush, when he was trailing, to Ted Koppel's interview dungeon.)

Both candidates are now wooing the constituency of the mean-spirited.

Let's face it, that is a sizable sing of the electorate, but it is probably not the majority of the swing vote. Most inde-pendents come down, in the end, more on pocketbook issues than social issues more on character judgments than a more on character judgments than a candidate's speed up the greasy flagpole. I am more worried about Bush the Front-Runner than Bush the Underdog. When running scared, he is open, available and specific; but when he gets ahead and starts running not to lose, he becomes along and imperious. he becomes aloof and imperious.

That is what he is doing now in debate planning. As front-runner, he wants only two presidential matchings, and neither one devoted only to foreign affairs lest his opponent match or trump the supposed Bush strong suit. This shows the vice president to be overconfident about his lead and underconfident about his ability.

As the wheel keeps turning, the Bush campaign may need those debates. Do not count too much on the Pledge of Allegiance issue, George — never forget the example of Richard Stans.

"I led the pigeous to the flag," we kids used to murmur, hands over hearts, "and to the Republic, for Richard Stans." He is still the most saluted man in American history — but does anyone remember what for?

Clichés Hide Zia's Misrule

In "After Zia, Maybe Bhutto - and Then What?" (Aug. 22), Mahmaz Ispahani uses many typically ill-informed cliches to describe the late President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq. The writer calls General Zia "an astute political actor." and cites his "shrewd politicking" and "passion for the Afghan cause." These phrases mean nothing.

The facts about General Zia are simple. His main political mission was to destroy Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. He started the job in 1977, deposing Mr. Bhutto in a coup, and completed it in 1979, when Mr. Bhutto was executed.

India's Record on Grain

In the opinion column "A Billion More Each Decade: The Population Crisis Lives" (July 29), Carl Haub writes that India now has a lower food-grain output per capita than in 1900.

According to the first census in inde-pendent India, conducted in 1951, the population that year was 356,878,000 and food-grain output was 50.85 billion tons. In 1981, the population was 685,184,692 and food-grain production was 133.06 billion tons.

It is clear from these figures that food-grain output per capita has actually gone up in independent India. If food production was low during colonial rule, the present government of town, passengers waiting for a ferry look out over a broad expanse of muddy water to the jungle on the opposite bank. Wooden houses stand on stilts at the river's edge. Women wrapped in sarongs wash themselves from platforms built over the water. Children splash about, laughing. Coconut palms and huge trees offer welcome shade.

Nearby is a mosque with an onionshaped dome. Its tin cladding seems to burn with a silver light in the glare of the midafternoon sun.

These scenes have not changed much since Joseph Conrad sailed the waters around Kalimantan as a ship's officer, calling at river ports and dealing with people who he later recreated in his novels and short stories. (Kalimantan, the southern two-thirds of Borneo island, now belongs to Indonesia.)

In the oppressive heat, the tempo of life is slow, matching the sluggish pace of the river. Even trade conforms to the leisurely rhythm of the tropics.

Beneath umbrellas and awnings on the jetty, vendors chat idly as they rearrange their food, cigarettes, soft drinks and toiletries. A woman on her hands and knees sorts peanuts for her next customers. Stalls display green-skinned mandarins, bananas, papayas, coconuts and a small pear-shaped fruit with a brown scaly skin, the salak. The ferry, coming from Samarinda, 40 kilometers (24 miles) downstream on the winding Mahakam River, has just come into sight around the bend.

Rivers in Kalimantan are "very important for transport and trade," explains Arief Djaya Laroemanda, branch manager for an Indonesian shipping line in Samarinda, "because there aren't many reliable roads going into the inte-rior." The potholed road that runs along the bank of the Mahakam from Samar-inda to Tenggarong peters out about 10 kilometers beyond this town.

Life here centers on the rivers. Most of the estimated population of six million, mainly Dyaks, Banjarmasis, Bugis, Jayanese and Chinese, live in towns and villages near rivers that coil like giant snakes out of the green heart of Borneo.

The third-largest island in the world (after Greenland and New Guinea), Borneo is swathed in jungle. Heavy rainfall and poor drainage have created a rim of inhospitable swamps along much of Kalimantan's low-lying coast.

A chain of mountains in the interior feeds water into the rivers. The Mahakam is said to be the biggest, and at Tenggarong, almost 100 kilometers from the sea, it is still several hundred meters wide. The source of the river is more than 560 kilometers from the sea: On the upper reaches of the Mahakan,

T ENGGARONG, Indonesia — the jungle closes in There are rapids, flash floods from sudden torrential rain storms, gaudy butterflies and swarms of mosquitoes. Branches and vines overhang the water, tugging at boats and passengers as they battle the current.

The ferry that pulls into the Tenggarong jetty is named Damai Samarinda. Damai is an Indonesian word meaning peace. She is a stordy craft built of hand-cut planks of wood, with bench seats and a roof where the luggage and cargo are stowed. Her destination is Muaramuntai, "We don't go very fast," says the skipper, who calls himself Captain Hari, "so with stops on the way, it may take us 24 hours."

Business, he says, as vendors offer food and drinks to passengers, is always good on the river. His main cargo on the downstream run to Samarinda is dried fish, tobacco and rotan. The fare, one way, is 3,000 rupiahs (about $2).

For those locked into a modern world where time is a measurement of efficiency and success, riverboat travel in Kaliantan may seem tedious and frustrating. It is often interrupted by delays when the current becomes faster and more treacherous as the hill country gets closer. The Mahakam attracts a particularly hardy type of tourist.

Garth Burgoine, who is 59 and walks with a limp, is taking the slow boat to Muaramuntai because he hopes to see jungle orchids and Dyak communities and to get to know ordinary Indone-sians. He is from a remote area of rural South Australia "where they measure a person by his character, not his assets."

Big cities, in Mr. Burgoine's view, are to be avoided at all costs. "I feel sorry for people who live in cities," he says. They are always under pressure to make more money. You can see it on their faces. All that strain. They have become artificial. They compete all right, but have lost the art of communication." From his office at one end of the Tenggarong jetty, Adji Zaman, an offi-cer of the Marine Police Department whose position approximates that of harbormaster, watches as the Damai Samarinda churns slowly upriver into the distance. He lights a kretek cigarette, exhaling its clove-scented smoke.

In front of him on the desk are a pair of battered binoculars. Behind him, where stairs lead to a watchtower, is a hand-cranked telephone painted silver. "It still works," he says proudly. "We can ring Samarinda from here, no problem. But we have this for emergencies," he says, pulling out a hand radio. When accidents happen on the Mahakan, he explains, it is mostly at night. Collisions. About 45 ferryboats call at Tenggarong daily. Foreign tourists?

Eighty-seven a month, precisely. "Life on this river goes on 24 hours a day," said Mr. Adji, adding with a smile, but not too fast.

For the IRA, the Price Of Escalating Violence Has Been Higher Risks

By Steve Lohr

New York Times Service BELFAST - After a string of deadly and successful attacks against the British military, the Irish Republican Army has in the last two days been forced to face up to the risks of its recent campaign of escalating violence.

Three of its guerrillas were killed by British commandes on Tuesday in the countryside of Northern Ireland. Then, two suspected IRA members were arrested on Wednes-guns and emplosives. Perhaps most damaging, two el-derly civilians in Londonderry were killed on Wednesday by an IRA bomb in a bungled operation. That incident has led even the guerrilla organization's hard-line supporters to publicly apologize to the victims' friends and relatives and openly criticize the IRA.

The IRA's stepped-up campaign against the British military, which has resulted in the deaths of 27 soldiers in the past six months, means that more of the small, close-knit guerrilla organization's members are engaged in missions at any one time. That makes it easier for military surveillance and attack units to catch IRA members during a mission.

Yet even more than the deaths and arrests of its guerrillas, the IRA suffers when it kills innocent civilians, especially ones in pre-dominantly Roman Catholic areas, such as the housing development in Londonderry where the two elderly persons were killed.

self in the position of murdering the people it is trying to liberate. One of the strongest advocates of the use of violence is Martin McGuinness, deputy leader of the Sinn Fein, the political wing of the IRA. His views are seen as mirroring those of the IRA leadership.
It is the ascendancy of hard-liners that lies behind the IRA's increased violence, analysts say.
But Mr. McGuinness considers the Londonderry incident a set-"I do have a responsibility to criticize individual IRA operations that result in civilian deaths," he said. "This tragic accident raises a number of questions that the IRA itself must answer.' Still, analysts do not think that recent events will cause the IRA to cut back appreciably on its campaign of attacks on the military.

The events also have underlined the political risk for Britain.

Britain has offered few details of the killing of the three IRA guerrillas on Tuesday. Yet based on ac-counts of nearby residents who reported seeing plant-clothes soldiers leaving the scene, the operation bears the hallmarks of a mission by the British Army's Special Air Services regiment, known as the SAS. For more than a decade, the SAS has been used for covert missions against the IRA. In the incident on Tuesday, the IRA has said that their men were "on active service," while the police have produced three guns the men were said to be carrying. But the men died in a car that was riddled with bullet-holes, raising questions as to whether they could have been apprehended alive.

Lisbon To Restore Fire-Ravaged District

The Chiado, the historic shop-ping district of Lisbon that was destroyed by fire last week, will be rebuilt as it was before the fire, according to city officials. They said restoration work would begin in mid-1989.

The decision put an end to a heated debate among Portugal's leading architects, divided over whether to restore the area or build a completely new, modern

The officials said a technical commission had found that most of the 18th-century facades in the 10-square-block area gutted by the fire could be saved and restored. Modern structures could be built behind the facades, and only two buildings would have to be torn down.

The fire, of undetermined origin, broke out Aug. 25 in the Armazens do Grandela department store on the Rua do Carmo pedestrian mall and raged for 10 hours before fire lighters could bring it under control. One per-son was killed, hundreds of people were left homeless and at least 2,000 are out of work. It was the worst disaster to hit Lisbon since an earthquake and fire destroyed much of the city in 1755.

In Memoriam — Henry Moore

In 1983, Henry Moore agreed that a major exhibition would be held at the Royal Acadeany to mark his 90th birthday. With the artist's death two years ago, the reason for the show has changed, and the exhibition that opens Sept. 16 will be a retrospective in memory of the great British sculptor. The comprehensive review will include more than 120 examples of his sculpture in a variety of styles and materials, both monumental and small-scale (such as "Rocking Chair No. 2," 1950, shown), representing all the stages of Moore's life work, in addition to about 120 drawings. The exhibition is to be arranged in chronological progression, with certain kinds of work grouped within decades, producing a pattern that shows the different ways in which Moore approached his preferred subject — the human figure. To Dec. 11.

Lyon's third Biennale In which runs from Sept. 13 to Oct. 6, is planned as a sweeping survey of dance in France, opening with an outdoor program at the Fourvière Roman theater combining the stroupe Emile Dubois and Jean-Claude Gallotta's choreography in "Mammame Montreal" and Yvette Horner and her orchestra in "Grand Bal Populaire." Other events, scheduled in different theaters in the city, include a new look at "La Bayadère," the celebrated Petipa clas-sic, by Andrew Degroat; a homage to the Marquis de Cue-vas by the Ballet du Nord under Alfonso Catà, with choreographies by Balanchine, William Dollar and John Taras; a gala program surveying four centuries of dance in France; the French premiere of Dominique Bagouet's "Petites Pièces de Berlin" by his Montpellier company; an evocation of Les Ballets Suedois, with reconstructions from its 1920s repertory, and the Compagnie Magny Marin, with a new work by the choreographer. The Ballet National de Marseille presents two programs of works by Roland Petit, "Tour Satie" and "Ma Pavlova," and the Paris Opera Ballet comes with its main company and the Groupe de Recherche.

The Shakespeare of Ballet

by Anna Kisselgoff

TR Frederick Ashton was the Shakespeare of ballet - not the Shakespeare who wrote revenge tragedies but the poet who composed love sonnets. The great English choreographer's genius—his refined sensibility and unbounded imagination—soared to heights of poetic metaphor that constantly looked new to dance. His special and unsurpassed contribution was to reveal the lyrical aspect of classicism in 20th-century ballet

On the night of Aug. 18 at his home in Sussex, Sir Frederick died in his sleep at the age of 83. The dance world has been robbed of its poet laurente, an appellation anything but restricted to his extraordinary gift for whipping up a choreographic gem for a gala or the dazzling ballets he conceived as pieces d'occasion such as "Homage to the Queen" n 1953 for the co beth II or "Birthday Offering" in 1956 for the 25th anniversary of what is now Britain's Royal Ballet

This was the company, of course, that Sir Frederick did so much to define and mold as chief choreographer beginning in 1935 and then, as director, from 1963 to 1970.

The truth is that he rose to any occasion. If it is impossible to speak of his artistic vision without mentioning poetry it is because his extension of ballet's classical idiom proved that — like any grammar — this idiom need not be limited to the equivalent of prose. It was Sir Frederick's firm view that a pas de deux, however brief, was as important as a three-act ballet because it could be as complete as a sonnet, a poem unto itself.

The lofty aspect of Sir Frederick's art should not, however, detract from the witty and delightful human side that was reflected in both his ballets and any personal encounter with him. The perfect mimic who could turn into Queen Victoria by placing a hand-kerchief on his head in a New York living room could just as easily be the choreographer of "A Wedding Bouquet" who would dress a dancer as a chimahna in a tutu and have her strike a pose from "Les Sylphides." "A Wedding Bouquet," performed frequently in recent years by the Joffrey Ballet, is one of the most hilarious ballets in existence. Yet, behind the seeming non sequiturs of its accompanying text by Gertrude Stein is an emotional logic that the Ashton choreography translates into bittersweet poignancy. This is the avant-garde Ashton of the 1930s, working in a non-linear fragmented structure and a creative dimension equal to Significantly, he chose to remain a classical choreographer, loyal to ballet's academic vocabulary. It is amazing to realize that one generation spawned the mighty triumvirate of ballet choreographers who renewed the classical tradition. George Balanchine was the supreme formalist in his use of the classical vocabulary: Antony Tudor revealed its unsuspected expressive possibilities, and Frederick Ashton took the same idiom into a metaphoric realm.

Sir Frederick Ashton soared to heights of poetic metaphor that constantly looked new to dance.

In this sense, he was a great innovator. The aptness of his exquisite imagery (the final love duet in "The Dream," where Oberon lulls Titania to sleep, or the portraits of Edward Elgar and his friends in "Enigma Variations") should not overshadow Sir Frederick's innovative exploration of technique (the uncompromising purity of line necessary for "Monotones" and the difficult necessary for "Monotones" and the difficult male solo in "Les Rendezvous").

Although one of British ballet's chief architects, Sir Frederick spent his formative years abroad. Born in Ecuador and raised in Peru, he returned home with his English family and created his first ballet in 1926 for Danie Marie Bombast and has new group of Dame Marie Rambert and her new group of dancers. In 1935, Dame Ninette de Valois invited him into her Vic-Wells Ballet, later renamed the Sadler's Wells and now the Royal Ballet. As a dancer, he also performed in 1928 with Ida Rubinstein's company, where Bronislava Nijinska's neoclassical innovations left a lasting imprint.

Sir Frederick's trademark was the con ous refusal to repeat himself, and within his prolific output there is an astonishing range. His "Scenes de Ballet" to Stravinsky is a complex, formal, plotless masterpiece. Unlike others, Sir Frederick revived interest in forgotten scores or librettos of 18th- and 19th-century ballets by creating new chore-ography for "Ondine," "The Two Pigeons," "Sylvia," "The Creatures of Prometheus" and a sublime "Fille Mal Gardée."

His many ballets inspired by literature were a special genre, transmuted by a lyrical dance impulse. These included "Romeo and Juliet" for the Royal Danish Ballet, his com-passionate view of Turgenev's "A Month in the Country" for the Royal and the daring poetic study, replete with sordid detail, of Rimbaud in "Illuminations" for the New York Civi Ballet York City Ballet.

Old Vienna Family Firm Restores Ties to the Past

by Alan Levy

TIENNA — For more than half a century the Rolls-Royce of ceramics was Goldscheider Vienna, a 300-year-old Jewish porcelam dynasty shattered by the Nazi takeover of 1938. Three generations and half a century later, Goldscheider porce-lain is back in business and still in the family.

The family firm began in the 17th century making beer mugs in Pilsen, in what is now Czechoslovakia, but did not achieve its international reputation until Friedrich Goldscheider moved to Vienna in 1885 and founded a factory that was also an art studio. Designs were solicited from important artists, who responded to the lures of Goldscheider's painstaking craftsmanship, including an innovative glazing technology that could put six or seven shades of gray into one

For his first dozen years Goldscheider focused on historicism, which in late-19thcentury Vienna meant a fusion of styles exemplified by the architecture of the city's new Ringstrasse and the voluptuous theatricalism of the disciples of the painter Hans Makart. Among the first artists Goldscheider approached were the brothers Ernst and Gustav Klimt, then painting florid conventional art on the ceilings of the Burgtheater. Before he could enlist the Klimts, however, Ernst died in 1892 and Gustav submerged himself for nearly five years in the works of Whistler, Beardsley and Manch. When he surfaced, he gave Goldscheider the right to make a mosaic relief version of an 1896 illustration of the god-

Peter Goldscheider.

With Klimt leading the Viennese Secession movement, Goldscheider followed fashion and went along with European talent. For the next 40 years, the name of Goldscheider was equated with the best works of Jugendstil, Art Nouveau, Art Deco and the Secession movement. The sculptor and potter Michael Powolny reduced Klimt motifs to playful ceramic figurines and vases while three mouts to piayrui ceramic ngurines and vases while three promising women artists — Vally Wieselthier. Susi Singer and Dina Kuhn — designed female torsos and animals. Toward the turn of the century Friedrich Goldscheider's four sons quarreled. One was banished to Leipzig to open a second factory and another's punishment was write in Paris where he accorded to the property was a probability. ment was exile in Paris, where he opened a branch that produced only bronzes. The Nazis came to all three addresses between 1933 and 1940 and the Goldscheider holdings were liquidated.

A butcher from Bavaria took charge of the Vienna plant, which was converted in 1941 to making electrical fixtures for the war effort, then bombed out of existence in 1945. Some 9,000 different works produced by the Goldscheiders became museum pieces and collectors' items and, in some cases, bribes to open frontiers oth-crwise closed. Most of the Goldscheiders fled to the United States, where Friedrich's son Walter and grandson Erwin tried to re-establish the business in Trenton, New Jersey, on a mass production basis. With sporadic success, it lasted until the early 1960s, when Erwin Goldscheider found it more lucrative to import Tirolean wood carvings than to try to duplicate Goldscheider quality porcelain Erwin's nephew Peter was born in April 1945 in Egypt, where Friedrich Goldscheider's other grandson, also named Friedrich, had met and married Margot Lewin, a refugee from Berlin. The Friedrich Goldscheiders re-turned to Vienna immediately after the war, but the head of the house went into import-export barter trading.

Theater of Deaf Growing in Japan

by David E. Sanger

OKYO - As soon as the powerful-looking Akahira Yonaiyama moves across the stage, speaking in Japanese sign language as he goes, the blur of simultaneous translations begins.

Yonaiyama is a star of the Japan Theater of the Deaf; as he plays his part in a rehearsal, a speaking member of the cast interprets the sign language into spoken Japanese. At the same time, Yonaiyama's lines are being spoken by an-other actor in English — and immediately translated into American sign language. In the performances, however, the only spoken words are in Japanese.

When Yonaiyama's American fellow actors from the National Theater of the Deaf in Chester, Connecticut, speak or sign their roles in the Tokyo International Theater Festival, the whole process is reversed.

"When you think about it, it should all be a confusing mess," the American group's artistic director, David Hays, said during a rehearsal for the festival, which just ended. "But somehow, it all works."

In fact, it does, and the success of this largely deaf cast from India, Japan, China and the United States seems to prove that sign language is less of a barrier on stage than the spoken word. Although spoken Japanese and English have about as much in common as sashimi and hot dogs, American and Japanese sign languages share fundamental concepts. "I think it must be easier to understand English sign lan-guage than English itself," the 36vear-old Yonaiyama said through a sign-language translator.

The deaf actors in the American and Japanese acting companies are soon chatting, and by late afternoon during one recent rehearsal it became clear they were already on each other's wavelengths.

HE festival took place in the Seibu Theater in Ikebukuro, a jammed commuter hub and shopping area in the northwest corner of central Tokyo. The Japan Theater of the Deaf, a small company founded eight years ago, opened its part of the program with a Kyogen, a traditional Japanese comedy often performed during the intermission of Noh, or dra-matic, plays. The American actors performed improvisations based on spoken and sign-language sug-gestions from the audience, with

Jews and Arabs in Jerusalem Trade Roles — for a Play

by Linda Gradstein

ERUSALEM --- A truncheon-wielding Israeli soldier approaches a young Palestin-ian wearing a kaffiyeh and demands his identity card. "Why is it torn?" he asks roughly. "Why don't you take care of it?" The soldier shoves the Palestinian, sending him sprawling to the ground. "Next time you are going to come with me, and no one, but no one, will find you."

The scene is a familiar one in the Palestinian refugee camps of the Israeli-occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip, especially during the past eight months of the intifadah, or Arab uprising against the Israeli occupation. But this time the scene was on a stage and the "Israeli soldier" was an Arab, 19-year-old Sa'ed Nashef.

Nashef is one of the founders of Tza'ad ("One Step"), a joint Arab-Israeli theater workshop, founded last February, which hopes "to encour age communication between the Jewish and Palestinian peoples," he said. The group performed for the first time recently, at the Conference for Alternatives in Jewish Education here. The workshop is one of the few Palestinian-

Israeli groups trying to maintain contacts during the uprising. The group is planning a New York tour in February, and performances are also scheduled in Israeli schools. One of the features of the group is its role reversals. All of the vignettes are based on experiences of group members, but the play turns them around. Jews pose as Arabs, and Arabs as Jews. The actors are affected by their roles. Nashef drapes a kaffiyeh over his Israeli soldier's uniform after the show. "I felt this feeling of power," he said of his scene as a soldier. "I hit him and he was on the ground, and there was a tenth of a second where I really felt I was a Jew and I had hit him. I thought Why did I do that? and I was thinking as a Jew. Then it all clicked back in." In another scene, set at a university, an Israeli student, Shmulik, complains to his girlfriend Nurit, "My room is full of Arabs" invited by his Israeli roommate Avi. "I'm not a racist," he says. "But I just spent one whole month on army reserve duty watching the Arabs hate me."

Shmulik struggles with his fears. "My head says they're students, they're Avi's friends," he says. "But my guts say 'watch out' - how do I know they're not secret PLO activists?" Israel Laks, 30, is a therapist for emotionally disturbed children. He has just returned from a month's army reserve duty in Shatti, a refugee camp in Gaza that has been one of the hot spots of the uprising. "Before I left, [the Arab group members] said. 'Come back in peace.' Laks said. "Come back in one piece," chimed in Na-T was Laks's second army reserve tour in Gaza this year, and he is scheduled for another in January. "I was scared a lot," he said. Soldiers annual reserve duty has doubled from 30 to 60 days since the beginning of the uprising. There was one soldier in his unit who behaved like Nashef in his role as an Israeli soldier. "Sometimes we let him beat people, and sometimes we stopped him," said Laks. "It depended on how much we had been insulted that day. He was doing what I wanted to do, but what I wasn't going to do."

Selwa Kenani, who played the female Arab student, is an 18-year-old Israeli Arab student living in Ramallah, a West Bank city. She says she feels closer to the Palestinians under occupation than to the Israeli Arabs, who are citizens of Israel. "I have Jewish friends from the university, and I always wondered what I'd do if I saw someone I know serving as a soldier at a check-point in Ramallah. I always thought I'd look away, but if I met Israel [Laks] there, I'd smile."

The acting is spontaneous and even amateurish, but the play was warmly received by the audience, Jewish educators from 18 countries. "You had me fooled," said one viewer. "I couldn't tell who were the Arabs and who were the Jews."

The group was formed as a result of the Arab uprising. Nashef met Joyce Klein, an American Jewish playwright, at an Arab-Jewish workshop in Jerusalem. They discovered they had theater in common and decided to form the group. "We said, 'This is the right time for it,' " Nashef said. "You can't push a button and change the whole situation, but we have to start with something." They chose the name of the group, Tza'ad, or-One Step, to reflect that hope.

Nashef's friends have had mixed reactions. Some of them were very excited," he said. "But when it came to joining, many of them live on the West Bank, and they can't stay for late rehearsals because of curfews. Others were very angry, but they gradually accepted what I was doing."
Strong friendships have developed among the group. "I now have Arab friends," said Fern

Allen, an Israeli immigrant from the United States. "It's just been one step, but it can go on." In the final scene, each actor describes his image of peace. "Peace is a place where no stones divide people," said Laks. "Peace is a mirror you can see yourself in, but also see through it to somebody on the other side," said Kenani. "Peace gives each of us another face," said Nashef.

had put down roots in America. switching to systems analysis and sales management for IBM, then going into the insurance business. Meanwhile, he and his wife, Brigitte, collected Goldscheider works to supplement those he had inherited. Peter kept in contact with antique shops and some 30 serious Goldscheider collectors around the world who "all had to come to me for

N 1985-86, the Historical Museum of the City of Vienna gave a special exhibi-tion of 100 of Peter Goldscheider's places for the 100th anniversary of the firm's establishment in the Austrian capital. The show's success and acclaim led several wealthy collectors to donate another 300 Goldscheiders to the museum and awakened a dream Peter had long harbored: to bring back Goldscheider quality as well as the authentication. Starting in the 1930s, there were many imitations."

As it happened, the name came first. Early last year, Peter gave up corporate management to incorporate himself as Goldscheider Ceramics. The plan had been to form a partnership with Weinerberger, a Viennese tile maker, but it fell through.

Peter Goldscheider had commissioned a market research study of the export market.

The market researchers told him they had received a similar inquiry from Michael Sommer, a maker of aluminum window and door frames in the town of Stoob, in the province of Burgenland, near the Hungarian border. Stoob was noted for its folkloric, somewhat kitschy pottery, but Sommer, who was moving to larger quarters, had the no-tion of filling the premises he was vacaring with a ceramics work making quality porce-lain for export. The market research firm played matchmaker, and with the help of a dynamic manager imported from Germany, what should have taken three years just took seven months.

Last September, Goldscheider Ceramics opened its plant in Stoob.

ANDMADE quality is the hallmark of the new venture. When he couldn't find 17 qualified craftsmen in Austria, Goldscheider imported a third of his talent from Germany, Hungary and Britain to work in Stoob. From the thousands of different works produced by Goldscheider Vienna, he selected 15 models — all on themes involving young women or dancing or both — ranging from an 1890s E. Tell vase

Walter Goldscheider, in his 80s, felt too old reconstruct the factory and his son Erwin Deco "Lili Mariene." Dakon, 84, one of the Educated in Vienna, Peter grew up to become a lawyer and professor before the opening in Stoob. The original models of all Goldscheider figurines were lost in the war, but the craftspeople in Stoob work from collectors' items, sculpting the new models 12 to 13 percent larger than the old figurines to allow for shrinkage in the two new computerized ovens. All works are authenticated by the Vienna Historical Museum At present, oven capacity allows production of no more than 1,000 pieces per year, although Goldscheider hopes to achieve 3,000 a year by 1990 or 1991. Works sell for 12,000 to 70,000 Austrian schillings ($935 to $5,450) with the average price around 20,000 in limited editions, Goldscheider imported a third of his craftsmen from Germany, Hungary and Britain.

Goldscheider Ceramics are distributed by Thonet, the famous Viennese furniture maker, and Lobmeyr, whose crystal chandeliers adorn many of the world's opera houses. With the line launched, Peter Goldscheider has moved on to phase two of his dream: to collaborate with contemporary artists the way his great-grandfather did. The first fruit of this is on display in the foyer of the Historical Museum — a 62-centimeter (two-foot) high gold-painted dome embraced by more than a dozen female figures in a ceramic sculpture by the Italian-born Austrian artist Wander Bertoni. Called "Lingam" which in pre-Freudian Hindu mythology means the phallic incamation of the diety Shiva — it retails for 20,900 schillings in an edition limited to 450 copies.

Goldscheider is now negotiating with two Austrian artists, the naive painter Gottfried Kumpf and the Surrealist Leherb, who has been working almost exclusively in faience painting in recent years. "Others will fol-low," says Goldscheider, "now that our craftsmen are working together comfortably. In America, you call it arts and crafts, but you have the order wrong. First comes the craft; only later do others judge it to be art."

(Catalogues in English, French or German can be ordered and factory tours arranged at Goldscheider Keramik, Neugasse 24, A-7344 Stoob.)

whole bit. In Hamburg they even have lifetime contracts. But I was sitting between guys a half a tone sharp on one side and a quarter tone flat on the other, I was missing all over the place, it was messing me up."

Porcino speaks his mind. He says he was "blackballed" a few years ago after several frank interviews, including one in the German razine Jazz Podium. (It was rumore falsely - that he had lost his lip.) He said that "Duke Ellington had a raggedy band," Thad Jones was a "tedious and omery cat," Dizzy Gillespie's trumpet with the turned up bell is "sacrilege," Jon Faddis is a "young punk trum-pet player" and Frank Rosolino was a much better trombonist than Vic Dickenson, who "couldn't blow his nose."

OW we come to the "crusade." Everybody criticized in the above paragraph is black. Porcino explains: "We all know the word 'discrimination.' My idea is that white jazz musicians are discriminated grainst. The whole world is so brainwashed about the black man being the only one who can play jazz that they refuse to acknowledge and support white players. Now, I'm not denying the greatness of Charlie Parker, Dizzy is one of my heroes except for that stupid bent-up born of his, I've always been a big fan of Jimmie Lunceford and Basic. Those guys booked me on jazz in the first place. But a lot of people think you can't play jazz unless you're black and I'm out to defend all the great white talent that gets no support. It's a crime and a

I may be terribly wrong about my opin-

Ashton

Continued from page 7 be the Ashton muse, but one suspects the relationship was more complex. He "inspired" her, not the other way around. In fact, the influence of Sir Fred or Fred, as he was called by adoring dancers, was felt in every generation at the Royal. This was notably true of Antoinette Sibley and Anthony Dowell, the company's present director.

For years, the Royal Ballet danced the 19th-century Russian classics as if they were Ashton ballets. His own choreographic interpolations in these productions were not always acceptable to purists, but they were creative jewels in their own right. One might, for instance, expect to see Petipa's original and dazzling head-on spectacle in the Gar-land Waltz of "The Sleeping Beauty"; the beautiful pattern that was substituted was typically Ashtonian, reminiscent of an En-

Lelish maypole dance. Sir Frederick leaves no obvious disciples and here he differs from Balanchine and Tudor. It is not that these choreographers can be matched in quality, but their style was strongly definable. Sir Frederick's sensibility was that of an aesthete in the best sense of the term, so personal as to be inimitable. $ 1988 The New York Times ions," says Porcino with disarming humor, "but I'm certainly sure of them."

One definition of "crusade" is "any remedial enterprise undertaken with zeal and enthusiasm," but it also has military and racial connotations and it's time to pour boiling oil on the siege machine. It's absurd to hold that white jazz musicians are discriminated against when the industry's creative decisions and means of production, distribution and publicity are controlled by whites. A man named Paul White-man was once crowned "King of Jazz."

It is, however, true that Europeans in particular tend to consider white jazz musicians less "authentic" — that is unless they are white Europeans. Nobody, not even Porcino, denies the music was created by blacks. From Louis Armstrong to John Coltrane, every major in-Amstrong to John Coltrane, every major innovator was black — except Django Reinhardt and he was a Gypsy, a close call. So if some blacks (or Gypsies) get a break by grace of history, give them a break.

Sounding black or white is another, and very delicate, matter. It is usually an insult to be told you sound white. The term "West Coast

Jazz" has a pejorative tinge to it and applies only to white West Coasters. (Charles Mingus and Eric Dolphy, both from Los Angeles, did not play "West Coast Jazz.") "White" connotes mushy phrasing, bland texture, lack of drive. This is basically nonsense because once you come down below the genius level, color is meaningless. When the time comes to make masic you either get into the slot or off the ILES Davis has said that white musicians play behind the beat. He re-proached the guitarist John Scofield for that in the press but he had hired Scofield in the first place and Miles himself pulls back on the beat. It is possible to swing very hard behind the beat, witness Thelonious Monk. And you can fall down a flight of stairs pushing it (no names). Paul Desmond and the pianist Bill Evans both played "white," but it would difficult to find a musician of any color who does not respect them. "Dumb" knows no color and "smart" is totally integrated and Poscino is skating off thin ice into deep water when he cites examples of blacks he believes do not deserve the breaks they get (Joe Henderson, Anthony Braxion) and whites who don't get the breaks they deserve (Carl Fontana, Sal Nistico) because none of them get enough breaks. The bottom-line is color blind. Currently based in Munich, Porcino leads a big band ("nobody knows as much about re-bearsing a band as I do") of young Germans. He is trying to interest a record company in its roaring performance at last year's Burghansen festival featuring the late tenorman Al Cohn, who by then knew he was dying of cancer, as guest solcist. Along with Zoot Sims and Stan Getz. Cohn was one of that white army of talented Lester Young disciples who a bitter Lester once said "sound more like me than me." (It can be argued that the disciples got more breaks than the master.) Listening to Cohn on Porcino's tape, however, you hear neither style nor race - only jazz in splendid technicolor.

Royal Court Theatre: An Appeal at 100

by Benedict Nightingale

ONDON - Reflecting on 100 years of Royal Court history, one could be forgiven for misquoting Oscar Wilde. To be responsible for one theatrical renaissance might be luck. To be responsible for two suggests that something is seriously right. A certain rough magic found its way into the brickwork of that dowdy little building in Sloane Square, and has stayed there through triumph and disaster, controversy and crisis — often crisis.

It's altogether predictable that the Royal Court Theatre should this year be celebrating its centenary not just by staging some decidedly odd new work, but with a public appeal for the $1.4 million without which, it would almost seem, production of plays will perish and the theater's very fabric crumble.

The present theater was designed to replace one converted from a chapel for Protestant dissenters. It seems an apt prove-nance, because the Royal Court has often been associated with dissent, despite its incongruously exalted name and fashionable Chelsea location.
It's where some of George Bernard Shaw's most combative plays were first staged, where John Osborne, David Storey, Edward Bond, Caryl Churchill, David Hare and many other subversive talents established themselves. And in recent years the theater has become a prime exporter of bold new plays, sending Churchill's "Top Girls" and Michael Hastings "Tom and Viv" to New York's Public Theater. Jim Cartwright's "Road," now at La Mama, is a pretty typical Court product, with its scathing vision of rump-class disarray in Margaret Thatcher's Britain.

T was in 1904 that the Court first nudged a moribund British theater in new directions. That was when Harley Granville-Barker, actor, dramatist, director and scholar, launched what is still remembered as the modern era's first great dramatic renaissance. He discovered John Galsworthy, he revived the half-forgotten Euripides. He staged his own brilliant "The Voysey Inheritance," Elizabeth Robins's feminist "Votes for Women!" and Shaw's "Man and Superman," "Major Barbara" and the often underrated "John Bull's Other Title," He definitively established the Irish sage as a major playwright.

Indeed, he brought the drama itself from the cultural margins and made it central, a forum where every earnest issue could be entertainingly debated. He proved the artistic value of nonprofit-making repertory, and gave fresh impetus to the campaign for a national theater. And with the banning of his own play "Waste," which dealt with abortion and political chicanery, Granville-Barker launched another important crusade - against state censorship.

Then, after just three brilliant seasons, Granville-Barker departed, and the Court became just another London theater, though one that would have its moments in the years ahead. There Shaw's "Heartbreak House" received its British premiere. And there important actors appeared, among them the apprentice Laurence Olivier.

The Court became a cinema in 1935, was damaged by bombs in the war, and didn't reopen until the early 1950s. Then, quite suddenly, came the second renaissance. In 1956 there emerged the English Stage Company, dedicated to revivifying a British drama that had become, in one critic's words, "as useful to the student of life as a doll's house to the student of town planning." Its third offering was a new play by an unknown young actor named John Osborne, "Look Back in Auger," which voiced with eloquence the frustration and resentment of those who saw no place for themselves in a class-ridden Britain. The theater suddenly seemed central again, "the place to be at."

HOSE are the words of Tom Stoppard, who had never seriously considered writing plays until the Court demonstrated that they didn't have to be cozy drawing-room comedies about the leisured classes. He was one of many who found the range of dramatic possibility almost miraculously broadened. Plays could involve working-class Jews reacting to fas-cism (Arnold Wesker's "Chicken Soup With Barley"), gypsies bringing chaos to a housing estate (John Arden's "Live Like Pigs"), hooligans running murderously arrok in London (Edward Bond's "Saved").

Though its influence was visible everywhere, the Court continued to justify its claim to be the "National Theater of New Writing." Laurence Olivier, feeling his career becalmed, came to restore it by playing a seedy comedian in Osborne's "Entertainer." Ann Jellicoe, Christopher Hampton, David Hare and Caryl Churchill successively became resident playwrights, proving them-selves with such seminal pieces as, respectively, "The Knack," "The Philanthropist,"
"Teeth 'n' Smiles" and "Cloud Nine."

Ralph Richardson, John Gielgud, Vanessa Redgrave, Paul Scofield, Peggy Ashcroft, Alan Bates — performers, writers, directors, they all came to do some of their finest work.

It has never been simple to categorize the Court's drama. The phrase "kitchen-sink realism" was coined for it in the 1950s, and could be literally applied to Osborne's "Look Back in Anger," set in a dreary one-room flat. And many plays have exaded proletarian disenchantment with British so-

Yet from Alec Guinness's "Macbeth" in 1980, 1966 to Jonathan Pryce's "Hamlet" in 1980, there have been notable revivals, too. There have been major imports, such as Athol Fugard's reports from the South African battlefield, "The Island" and "Sizwe Bansi Is Dead."

Max Stafford-Clark, the Court's director for eight years, thinks its prime function is to raise issues of moment, question and stir. "It's to insure that the British theater is a major vehicle for social debate and the examination of our society," he says.

It's an approach that has sometimes exas-perated Right, Left and Center. John Os-borne, no revolutionary these days, has sug-gested that the theater has been hijacked by closet Marxists. Edward Bond has called for the rejection of Samuel Beckett and the Court's transformation into a fully "Socialist

But then the theater has never been afraid of offending people, and has sometimes positively courted controversy. As in the Edwardian era, it moved effortlessly into the van of the battle against the lord chamberlain, the official responsible for theatrical censorship.

Only the abolition of censorship in 1968 prevented all-out war with the establish-

In 1987, Stafford-Clark attempted to stage Jim Allen's "Perdition," which accused some Zionists of doing back-room deals with the Nazis, only to have second thoughts and cancel the play 48 hours before its opening. That didn't help Stafford-Clark's already strained relations with the management, which this year renewed his contract only after advertising his job and interviewing several other applicants.

Many disputes have involved mounting deficits and debts, though these have invariably been incurred for the best of reasons. "Some plays you do because they're saying something worthwhile," says Stafford-Clark, some because it's necessary for the author's career, and some because you'd rather die than not do them."

Stafford-Clark says he'll resign rather than cease taking risks. Shrinking state grants have forced the Court to reduce its home-grown offerings to four in its main theater and four in its attic-studio, the Theatre Upstairs, compared with 16 a few years ago. It now fills the gap with joint productions with other theaters or imports.

But there's a growing gap between the Court's $1.6 million income and its expenditure, even when it achieves its aim of selling an average of 60 percent of the seats. To further diminish the production quota would, in Stafford-Clark's words, "destroy our editorial identity and reduce us to a booking agency."

As it is, the Court has cut costs as far as it dares. There's much doubling of roles in plays with sizable casts. Production budgets are rarely more than $100,000. The weekly maximum salary for any actor is $280.

All this explains the appeal for $1.4 million, which is supposed to not only finance rebuilding and refurbishment, but also to wipe out a production deficit expected to be $150,000 this year. But the sum will be hard to raise. Because of its radical reputation, the theater has always had trouble getting money from business and wealthy individuals.

It would be a pity if the Court's centenary were followed by its contraction or even collapse. Its potential for achievement remains. The Court can always be relied on to uncover talent and deal with difficult subjects. This year alone has seen a new play by Howard Barker, culminating in the eating of a Christ-like character by his followers, and another by Howard Brenton, set in a socialist-anarchist utopia. Some 31 writers are now under commission.

Love it or hate it, or both - the only impossibility is indifference — the Royal Court seems determined to keep the British theatrical renaissance very much alive.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which had lost 6.58 Wednesday, fell 29.34 to close at Declines led advances by about a 3-1 ratio.

Volume was 144.09 million shares, up from 130.48 million traded Wednesday. Broader market indexes also declined sharply. The NYSE composite index fell 1.61 to close at 146.68. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 3.17 to 258.35. The price of an average share lost 34 cents.

"We are really stuck in a trading range and find ourselves just giving back the gains won earlier in the week," said Sid Dorr, vice president at Robinson-Humphrey Co. in Atlanta, noting the Dow's 24-point advance on Monday. The sell-off, which was pretty much across the board, got started with the overseas mar-kets," he said. "There was decent volume in the first two hours of trading and then it dried up," making it difficult for the market to dig itself out of the hole.

Peter Brodie, executive vice president of Centre Square Investment Group in Philadelphia said. The early weakness reflected renewed concern over higher interest rates and weakness in the overseas markets.

Cease-Fire in Gulf Focuses Interest on Tanker Stocks

By MATTHEW L. WALD

New York Times Service EW YORK — The cease-fire in the Iran-Iraq war is causing some investors to take a second look at oil shipping stocks. Since the Gulf War began in 1980, oil tankers have suffered in ways that are dramatic and violent and also from a less obvious long-term shift in the oil

Peace could reverse the long-term process, according to executives in the industry and analysts who follow the handful of shipping companies that are publicly traded. The oil shipping business, always cyclical, was already showing some signs of a serviced before the peace talks. revival before the peace talks.

Most tanker capacity is owned by major oil companies, which get only a small part of their profits from transportation. Many other tankers are held by private companies, often family

The rate of tanker

The rate of tanker The three tanker companies that are publicly traded in the scrapping is down, United States all showed and new ships are strong stock growth in the first half of this year, and analysts under construction. say the cease-fire is another positive sign for the industry.

Overseas Shipholding Group, traded on the New York Stock Exchange, ended 1987 at $16.75 and closed Thursday at $23.50, a jump of more than one-third so far this year. The rise in Gotaas Larsen's stock price has been even steeper. It closed Thursday at $39.375 bid in over-the-counter trading, compared with $21.50 on Dec. 31. And OMI Corp., also traded over the counter, closed at $5.50 bid, up from $3.25 at the end of last year.

Shipowners expect the demand for tankers to rise. After several dismal years, the rate of tanker scrapping is down, and several companies have new ships under construction.

The physical damage of the "tanker war" has been severe. Since April 1984, when it began, 250 seamen have died in 342 attacks, according to Intertanko, the International Association of Independent Tanker Owners, based in Oslo. Sixty-two vessels have been declared complete losses, with a volume totaling 10.9 million deadweight metric tons, by Intertanko's count.

But that is only part of the damage to the industry. The fall of the shah of Iran set loose a chain of events that sharply lifted oil prices, which reduced the demand for oil while stimulating deilling all over the world.

HAT WAS BAD for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which lost half its market share, but it was worse for tankers because the new drilling tended to be in places close to consumption, so total ton-miles declined. In addition, Iraq built pipelines through Turkey to the Mediterra-nean, cutting down the number of tankers needed to move oil to

Now the betting in many quarters is that oil prices will fall and shipping will grow. And if prices fall, the higher-cost producers around the world would cut back, and more of the supply would come from the Middle East. That would mean more long-haul shipping.

Philip L. Dodge at Nomura Securities says he sees sees indications that the Iraqis would return to shipping oil through the Shatt-al-Arab waterway, now clogged with war debris. A dispute about sovereignty over the waterway, formed by the union of the Tigris and Euphrates, was one of the causes of the war.

In addition, "United States imports have nowhere to go but up," said Paul B. Ting, an analyst with Oppenheimer & Co. A combination; then, of Gulf peace and extra demand for imports by the United States would benefit companies with the very large ships that carry oil on longer romes, such as Overseas Shiphold-ing, Gotass Larsen and OMI Corp.

LONDON - British Petroleum Co. said Thursday it would sell a 15 percent interest in its BP Gold Co.

in a public stock offering that analysts valued at about $270 million.

BP said it would sell up to 11.25 million shares, half of them in North America and half elsewhere. BP Gold is a subsidiary of BP Minerals America, headquartered in Salt Lake City, Utah. On com-pletion of the offering, BP Minerals

Pacific Dunlop Targets America Australian Firm Looks Abroad for Further Growth

By Hugh D. Menzies New York Times Service NEW YORK - Pacific Dunlop Ltd., an Australian conglomerate, is outgrowing its home market and is quietly invading the United States.

Eight years ago, the Melbourne-based company did al-most no business in America. Today, after a spate of acquisi-tions, Pacific Dunlop's sales in the United States are running at more than $1.1 billion annually, more than $1.1 billion annually, roughly 25 percent of the company's total. Pacific Dunlop brands found on U.S. shelves include Coward shoes, Champion batteries, Ansell medical gloves, Lifestyle condoms and Telectronics pacemakers. So far, profits from U.S. sales are not outstanding, with the ex-ception of those for the Ansell latex group, whose medical gloves and condoms are in demand as preventatives against

But that may change, as Pacific Dunlop continues to integrate its brands and sales networks. In Australia, the company's growth has slowed. It commands a market share of at least 40 percent in most of its major busi-nesses, including tires, other rub-ber products and clothing. The share is huge by Austra-lian standards. But Pacific Dunlop's penetration of the U.S. market is smaller, where sales revenue is equivalent to a mere 3 percent market share. Aside from this potential for growth, there are other reasons for the company's move into Faced with high Australian labor costs in the past, the company shifted production abroad for certain products, particularly footwear and latex goods. The countries in which those goods are made — notably Chi-na — soon made it clear that they wanted larger export mar-kets for the goods, which are made under exclusive contracts, than Australia offered. Pacific Dunlop then turned to the United States, which has a similar culture to Australia and a huge, easily accessible market.

The push into the United States has been led by Philip Brass, the 40-year-old managing director. He assumed the job last company.

Mr. Brass assumed the helm in an especially prosperous period. In the fiscal year ended June 30, Pacific Dunlop had record sales of about $2.8 billion and gener-ated estimated net profit of $140 million, at current exchange

Since 1980, the company has increased earnings per share an average of 13 percent annually, and it has increased net profits at a compound rate of more than 30 percent a year.

The results have impressed

Australia's business community. In 1987, John Gough, the former chief executive of Pacific Dunlop, was named the Australian essman of the year. He was credited with revamping the company, which was once considered too centralized and insu-

Mr. Brass faces the task of extending Mr. Gough's winning streak. Analysts who follow the Pacific Dunlop believe there is a good chance the new chief execurive will succeed.

very patient," Mr. Silverman said, "but not at all laid-back." The admired management style evolved along with Pacific Dunlop, which started as an Australian subsidiary of Britain's Dunlop Tire Co.

After gaining its independence, the company gradually diversified into other rubber products, including footwear, battery casings, cable coverings, rainwear, latex gloves and condoms. Then it moved into non-

To solve the problem, management divided the company into autonomous divisions and directed the various unit heads to push for leadership in their respective markets.

Malaysia and Indonesia. While consumption might rise in response to lower retail prices of chocolate and drinking cocoa, it would not be enough to make a significant dent in the surplus, the analysts said.

The Ivory Coast, the world's biggest producer, has protested against weak prices by limiting sales. This has boosted prices for short-term supplies of good-quality cocoa from all sources.

Denis Bra Kanon, the country's agriculture minister, said Wednesday that the International Cocoa Agreement, which tries to regulate world supply and prices, is dying.

He was speaking at a meeting of the 12-member Cocoa Producers' Alliance before talks in London next week aimed at salvaging the agreement. The talks will try to resolve a fierce producer-consumer conflict over what price levels the pact should aim to defend.

This dispute has prevented the International Cocoa Organization, a group of producing and consuming nations, from taking additional measures to support prices since its buffer stock reached its maximum 250,000 tons in late February.

President Félix Houphouet-Boigny of the Ivory Coast said earlier this week his country would not join any future pact unless the mar-pires at the end of September 1990. The International Cocoa Organization has proposed scrapping fees paid by members to fund its buffer stock. The price-stabilizing buffer stock buys in times of surplus and

France Rejects Idea of Selling Noble Vineyard

PARIS — Agriculture Min-ister Henri Nallet said on Thursday that France would prevent the sale of the Burgundy vineyard Romanée-Conti, which produces one of the country's finest red wines, to a Japanese company.

But the owners of the property said they had never intended to sell the vineyard and reiterated that the proposed sale to the Japanese retail group Takashimaya was of a 33 percent stake in the wine's marketer, Leroy SA. "I will stop the sale of Romanée-Conti to a Japanese company," Mr. Nallet said at a news conference, adding that he had asked Finance Minister Pierre Bérégovoy to intervene. One of the co-owners of the vineyard, Aubert de Villaine. said: "It is out of the question for us to sell Romanée-Conti. We are fully aware that the estate is part of our country's national heritage."

They said the rise in production made nonsense of efforts by Subroto, the secretary-general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, to persuade Iraq to accept the cartel's quota again.

"Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates pushed up exports in August," an oil industry analyst said. "But it is very early to say if all had acted together to force non-OPEC producers to cut out-put. They must have been watching each other and pumped more not to miss the bandwagon."

Subroto is trying to forge a deal between Iran and Iraq to bring the latter back into OPEC's quota system, preferably at Iran's level of 2.369 million barrels per day. That would mean Iraq would have to cut output by around 400,000 barrels Iraq refused to join OPEC's output pact two years ago after Iran blocked Iraq's request to raise its 1.54 million quota to Iran's level.

Varity Discusses Offer for Fruehauf

Compiled by Our Staff From Dupatches
TORONTO — Varity Corp., formerly Massey-Ferguson Ltd., has revealed that it is discussing a possible takeover of the Detroit-based Fruchauf Corp. and is particularly interested Kelsey-Hayes Co., a subsidiary that makes auto parts.

Varity, which makes farm and industrial ma-hinery, said that it was "engaged in preliminary discussions regarding the possible acquisition," and that it would keep Kelsey-Haves and spin off Fruehauf's trailer business in the event of a takeover. Fruehauf class B common stock was un-changed at $5.00 a share in trading on the New York Stock Exchange Thursday, following a gain of 50 cents after Varity's announcement on slipped 25 cents to $13.625 a share Thursday after having gained $1.125 on Wednesday.

Based on 11.962 million class B shares and 12.324 million class A shares, the market value of the company's stock is about $228 million. It has more than $700 million of debt Fruehauf recently announced that it was seeking buyers for the auto parts subsidiary. Varity said no agreement in principle had been reached and "there was no certainty that any transaction would occur."

Varity's international interests include Massey-Ferguson farm machinery. MF Industrial machinery, Perkins Engines Group, Dayton Walther automotive components and Pacoma hydraulic products.

The holding company also acquired a heavy-duty truck parts operation earlier this year.

Varity described the acquisition as the first step in developing a business supplying aftermarket parts for the automotive, farm machinery and ndustrial equipment industries. (UPI, Reuters)

American Airlines Sues Over Bonus Plan Abuse

FORT WORTH, Texas — American Airlines has filed lawsuits in three cities against individuals and companies, charging that the airline's frequent flier program has been abused.

"The complaints allege that millions of dollars in revenue are being lost due to sale and barter of AAdvantage awards," said Lowell Duncan, vice president of corporate communications for American cations for American.

"We simply cannot tolerate this situation," he said, adding that other suits may be filed. "We have an obligation to our AAdvantage members who do abide by the rules and to our paying customers to put a stop to the practice." The program's rules specify that customers earning free trips and benefits cannot sell their tickets to others. Members may give them to anyone they choose, but the airline has repeatedly reminded people that the awards can not be sold, purchased or bartered. The suits were filed in Fort Worth against Texas Traveller, in Salt Lake City against Plati-num World Travel and the Coupon Connection; and in New York against American Coupon Exchange. The companies do major business in buying awards from frequent fliers and selling them to others. In all three suits. American has asked for an injunction to stop the defendants from purchasing, selling, bartering or brokering AAdvantage requent flier bonus mileage.

American filed a similar suit Tuesday in Fort Worth against Texas Budget Flights and the travel agency's owners. Curtis R. Sweeten and Tonya K. Sweeten, the Fort Worth Star-Tele-

French Growth Dropped to 0.6% In 2d Quarter

PARIS — France's economy grew by 0.6 percent in the seconds quarter of 1988, the National St. tistics Institute reported Thursday. That was slower than 1.2 percent in the first quarter of this year and I percent in the second quarter of last year.

The statistics institute, known as INSEE, said that French economic growth would reach 3 percent for all of 1988 if the economy retains its momentum.

Finance Minister Pierre Bérégo voy forecast earlier this week that French growth for the year would probably be above 3 percent, and he said it could reach 3.5 percent. France recorded expansion in its gross domestic product of 2.2 percent in 1987.

The state institute said that although production of goods and services slowed in the second qual ter, output remained at a high level.

INSEE said private consumption fell 0.1 percent from the first quarter of the year. Purchases of food and manufactured products. which make up more than half of household consumption, fell by 0.2 percent and 2 percent.

Amoco Completes Buyout of Dome, a Record in Canada

Dome owns gas properties in Western Canada and the Canadian Arctic valued at about 4.5 billion dollars as of the end of last year. The value of those properties and its oil and gas reserves diminished while the takeover battle wore on, but the merged company will quickly find new strength, Amoco said.

"Both of these companies are partners," said an Amoco Canada spokesman, Ted and reports assets of 4.1 billion dollars. Its stock price has sunk from a high in 1981 of Rolfvondenbaumen. "There is a lot of synergy between these two companies. Dome and Amoco are joint operators in a number of

on Monday, Amoco cleared the last major obstacle to the Dome purchase. It reached an agreement to settle a 400 millio noollar loan that Dome secured in 1981 from Japan's Arctic Petroleum Corp.

Neither Amoco nor Dome has said how much the settlement will add to Dome's price. The loan had an interest rate of 16 percent and Dome said it owed about 1.2 billion dollars by the beginning of this year.

Officials said last year that settling the loan, with interest, could add another 1 bil-lion to the cost of buying Dome. On Tuesday, an Alberta court confirmed the decision of a previous court about the fairness of Amoco's takeover.

Abdul Rehmann Premji, a shareholder, had contended at a hearing earlier this sum mer that the investors he represented offered 1 billion dollars more for Dome than Amoco. But the court held that Amoco's bid was fair.

Dollar Lower Before U.S. Employment Report

NEW YORK — The dollar fin-ished lower in slow trading against most major currencies Thursday as the market awaited the release of U.S. employment figures.

The U.S. currency rose against the British pound but was weaker against other units, including the yen. Earlier in Tokyo, it had been strong against the lappages gures. strong against the Japanese curren-cy as the Bank of Japan persisted in its refusal to raise the interest it charges on loans to commercial

But the Japanese central bank allowed short-term debt rates to rise, which helped the yen.

BREAKING THE BANK: The Decline of BankAmerica. By Gary Hector. Little, Brown, 34 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. 02108.

With a bank or savings and loan failing every other day and many more in trouble, one might wonder whether the qualifications of many of the leading U.S. bankers are more than skin deep. For all the tailored suits, country club memberships, golf outings and six-and seven-figure salaries, too many bankers lack the single most important ingredient for banking: good judgment.

Nowhere is that more evident than at BankAmerica, once the largest, most innova-tive commercial bank in the nation but now struggling to clean up a stack of bad loans that has pushed the institution to a distant third place.

in "Breaking the Bank," Gary Hector, a writer for Fortune magazine, tells the story of BankAmerica's rise and fall in the way it deserves to be told. He shows how BankAmerica's problems are really the tale of all that's right and wrong with flabby American corporations. Along the way, Hector provides a good summary of the major forces that have reshaped banking since the turn of the century.

BankAmerica's history is only partially told through the institution's nearly uninterrupted stream of losses in recent years — losses that give it the onerous distinction of having lost more money than any other bank ever. The numbers were merely symptoms of the prob-lems. Hector, a good storyteller, knows that the best way to chronicle the bank's difficulties is through the human beings who took the com-(Kathleen Day, WP) pany into disarray. WRITERS AT WORK: The Paris Review leterviews, Eighth Series. Edited by George Plimpton. Introduction by Jovce Carol Oates. in Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010. A staple of current journalism, interviews with authors date back at least to the Age of Johnson and Boswell, when they served not only as a form of biography, but also as a compendium of wise and memorable sayings.

But back when the Paris Review was founded in 1953, that literary publication developed a new kind of extended and articulate interview that combined the Boswellian aim with an exploration of the ideas of major contemporary writers on the art of fiction and poetry. The result: A heightened awareness of a writer's overall purpose and meaning.

Formal in structure, the taped Paris Review interviews have precluded a certain spontane ity; but they have also guarded against a slip of the tongue or a moment's whim. Meticulous editing made them essentially more authentic, for, as Joyce Carol Oates notes in her introduc-tion to "Writers at Work," "We are likely to be most faithful to our convictions when we have had time to contemplate them."

In this eighth, provocative selection, the ever versatile editor of Paris Review, George Plimpton, expands the domain of the creative imagi-nation to include the writings of an essayist (the late E.B. White), a biographer (Leon Edel), an editor and publisher (James Laugh-lin) and a translator from the Classics (the late Robert Fitzgerald). With seven wide-ranging novelists and two poet-essavists rounding out the volume, the talk — not surprisingly — is quite heady. (Nonu Balakian, NYT)

MAMAW: A Novel of an Outlaw Mother. By Susan Dodd, Viking Inc., 40 West 23d Street, New York, N. Y. 10010. The tale of Frank and Jesse James has been dime-noveled, filmed repeatedly, lied about by back-porch historians and enlarged in song by Nashville. A fresh approach is needed when tackling such well-known subject matter, and in "Mamaw." Susan Dodd has found one. Though not much attention has been paid to the mother of these outlaws. Dodd has corrected the oversight by focusing on Mrs. Robert James, née Zerelda Cole, known as Mamaw, in a bold attempt to bring a maternal icon into the legend. (David Woodrell, WP)

A Speedy Appraisal of Stars & Stripes

By Barbara Lloyd New York Times Service

SAN DIEGO - There is usually not much of a breeze off the coast of San Diego at this time of the year. But try to tell that to Duncan MacLane, who was awash in a wall of water recently aboard Stars & Stripes, the America's Cup defender.

The ocean waves off Point Loma welled up like geysers between the twin hulls of Stars & Stripes. The 60-foot (18-meter) catamaran was sailing in a 15-knot breeze, moderate by most standards, but the feather-light Stars & Stripes — at 6,000 pounds (2,700 kilograms), a fraction of the weight of most boats its size - streaked across the water as if it were running before a hurricane.

There was not a dry spot on the boat. The sea took hold of MacLane and engulfed him like a pebble on a beach. He stayed firm, a staunch but sodden crewman, grabbing the deck as the wave retreated. The sail Monday offered a heavy dose of action for the nine crew members of the Stars & Stripes, as well as for three guests along for the ride.

Dodging waves on what amounted to a waterborne trampoline was like crossing a river during spring runoff. There were no cozy nooks as there are on most boats; only the constant whoosh of water beneath the open netting that suffices as a deck between the twin hulls. Above everything towered a 100-foot rigid sail that looked like an airplane wing stood on end.

The sail is made of carbon-fiber materials that are lacquered in white. Transparent plas-tic panels reveal the inner structure, a gossamer network of ribs and joints. An intricate set of adjustments at the base of the mast controls the shape of the sail. The boat is one of two built by the San Diego Yacht Club to defend the America's Cup against a challenge by Michael Fay of New Zealand. Fay, who went to court to force San Diego to accept his challenge and built a 132-foot monobull, went back to court to block the use of a catamaran as the defendст. Fay has charged that since multihulls are inherently faster than monohulls, such a race

Dennis Conner, the skipper of Stars & accelerates and decelerates like a dinghy. Stripes, insists that Fay is overreacting. ConWhen you head up, the boat slows down ner, a 15-year veteran of America's Cup racing, maintains that the two boats will be similar in speed upwind. On the two other points of sailing reaching and running, Conner will only go so far as to concode that his multihall might have the advantage. Under any condition, he worries about the skittish catamaran breaking down.

While Stars & Stripes behaved like a wild stallion Monday, the crew decided on a race against the second Stars & Stripes catamaran, Although Conner is known as an expert on monohulis, he has adapted well to his twinhulled boat. He says the catamaran reacts like the small boats he grew up sailing in San Diego.

a boat with a conventional soft sail. By radio, the crews agreed on a triangular course with equal legs of about eight miles (13 kilome-

Conner would not give the exact length of the legs, since that would make it possible to find out how fast Stars & Stripes was going. Conner treats boat speed like a state secret, and with three outsiders on board, he was not taking any chances. One could only watch the water hissing off the stern and estimate that Stars & Stripes was sprinting at about 22 monohulis, the 45-year-old sailor has adapted well to his twin-hulled boat. He says the catamaran reacts just like the small boats he grew up sailing in San Diego.

When you head up, the boat slows down immediately, because it has very little mo-

The acceleration capabilities of Stars & Stripes turn sailing the boat into an athletic free-for-all. The boat steered itself through a turn as Conner bounded across the 30-footwide expanse of deck to change from one tiller to the other.

The crew drove the boat hard in the practice race, adding a jib when it seemed to the visitors that the mainsail was enough. Conner called for the extra sail despite reservations by his on-board multihull expert, Cam Lewis.

From his tactician, Tom Whidden, Conner quietly wanted to know the position of the other catamaran; from Bill Trenkle, head sail-trimmer, he wanted the jib made ready; from Carl Buchan, the traveler operator, he wanted the mainsail eased.

"This is an accident waiting to happen," Conner said at one point.

He was talking about the technology of Stars & Stripes, a boat with some of the bugs still in it. In trying to make the boat as fast and as light as possible, compromises were made with gear strength. During practice sails, the crew has lost the soft sail rig over the side, has snapped centerboards, and has bro-ken mainsheets. If the hard sail topples, Conner concedes, it will be ruined.

To sail a catamaran properly, the windward hull should be lifted out of the water, but not so high as to destabilize the boat and possibly flip it over.

Flying with one hull out of the water at what seemed like breakneck speed — the crew calls it "hauling the mail" — Stars & Stripes dug both bows into the three-foot seas. The boat reared up like an ornery horse. No one on the crew said much, but the jolt was sobering. A severe knock could topple

"What's better?" Conner said about the day's practice bout. "To push the boat now, or wait and see what it can do when we're sailing for the America's Cup?" No one needed to ask what he meant.

Several players, including Minnesota's Gary Gaetti and Boston's Mike Boddicker, even had their new contracts written so that they would receive the bulk of their money in 1989, their reasoning being that a 1990 salary may be irrelevant if there are no games.

"It may mean short-term collective bargaining agreements in the future," said Donald Fehr, executive director of the players union. "Maybe we'll have to have double and triple damages for violations of free agency. Maybe there'll need to be a floor on

Of 79 free agents that winter, 37 re-signed with their former clubs, 21 switched teams and 21, including Horner, who went to Japan, did not return to the major

However, the union's grievance was based on the fact that, of the dozen or so elite free agents, none received a competing offer bigger than he had received from his current team.

Two players eventually changed teams, but Parrish accepted a $547,000 pay cut to switch from the Tigers to the Philadelphia Phillies and Dawson accepted a $50,000 pay cut to move from Montreal to the Chicago Cubs. They were the first prominent free agents to change teams since Bruce Sutter moved from the St. Louis Cardinals to the Atlanta Braves after the 1984

Club executives testified that teams increased the exchange of information to their competitors at the encouragement of Ueberroth. General managers reported telephone contacts with free agents to the players' former clubs and some documents were

OBSERVER

The Late, Late Show

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — Every time I mention Admiral Arleigh A.

Burke in this column, I get two or three things terribly wrong. For this reason I have been hesitant to report that Admiral Burke. a hero of World War II, is alive.

I do so now only on the testimony of several reliable witnesses, including L. Edgar Prina, a veteran newsman whose trustworthiness I have respected for 30 years. "Very much alive." Prina says of Admiral Burke, whom I had called "the late" Admiral Burke.

Having recently seen "The Manchurian Candidate," I am still uneasy. The pathetic victim in that movie has only to open a deck of cards and see the Queen of Dia-monds to fall completely under the evil power of perverted Chinese Communist brain control and start killing people he would normally be content to dismiss with a sneer.

Of course, the poor devil has been kidnapped during the Korean War, hauled off to Manchuria and brainwashed by experts to go off the scope every time he sees the Queen of Diamonds.

The parallel between his predicament and mine was troubling. Every time I wrote the words "Admiral Burke." I lost control of my own mind and started committing errors galore.

I have never been in Korea, but in 1961 I did spend several weeks at a diplomatic conference in Geneva attended by the Chinese Commu-

I remember attending their news briefings. The Chinese smoked cig-arettes incessantly. In rooms smokier than an old Bette Davis movie, I nodded.

At least I thought it was only a nod. But who knows? There has to be some explanation for this Admiral Burke business.

Calling him "the late" was the worst error of all, for I took an oath 20 years ago never to call anyone "the late" and believe I kept it inviolate until the words "Admiral Burke" leaped off my keyboard.

article in which I referred to the creator of Dick Tracy as "the late Chester Gould.

The vow was occasioned by an

Gould, of course, was not a bit I was properly castigated as a man who didn't even bother to find out who was late and who was shoddy example of a newspaper

And quite right, too. So I swore off "the late." Why newspapers are so fond of it is a question some candidate for the Ph.D. in Pompous Prose might well explore in an exhaustive piece of research. No journalist, after all, ever feels tempted to write of "the late Aristotle," "the late King Henry VIII," or "the late Thomas Jefferson."

Why should a humdrum, ordinary, run-of-the-mill journalistic mind, alighting on an Admiral Ar-leigh Burke or a Chester Gould, instinctively prefix the distin-guished man with "the late"?

After the Chester Gould gaffe, I developed a theory. It concerned the nature of fame.

People who become famous when we are young often drop out of public sight and mind as we become older than they were in their time of glory.

Growing old ourselves, we tend to look back through a psychological distorting mirror on our youth as a time long ago, far away, and quite dead and gone.

By association, the people we re-member as famous in that remote past tend to become dead for us,

If, writing away, we think of one of them whom we have not thought about in a long time — say, Max Baer, Richard Barthelmess, H.V. Kaltenborn - we are likely to assume he is dead and gone, gone with the wind that robbed us of our youth and our gods.

Well, it's only a theory. Still, note that Aristotle, Henry VIII and Thomas Jefferson, who have no meaning in our childhood outside the schoolroom, never suffer from being called "the late." In short, my theory holds that in thoughtlessly, carelessly applying "the late" to long-forgotten giants of our youth, we are actually acknowledging the death of ourselves

Anyhow, I apologize to Admiral Burke. He is a destroyer man and a hero. I was in the airplane navy. My greatest deed was creating a beautiful shower of sparks by forgetting to put my wheels down for landing one night. Figures, doesn't

Sayles Takes On Big League Greed

By George Vecsey
New York Times Service EW YORK — Trumpets Nand banjos playing Dixieland, athletes in baggy flannel uniforms, fleecy clouds and bright sunshine, and cigar smoke and grass and dirt so real you can smell them.

Play ball! John Sayles, who has respectfully looked at hard-working people in Harlem and Appalachia in films like "The Brother From Another Planet" and "Matewan," has lovingly turned his attention to underpaid work-ers in another corner of the United States — baseball. In "Eight Men Out," which opens in New York Friday, Sayles, 37, has dramatized Eliot Asinof's book about eight mem-bers of the Chicago "Black Sox" who conspired to lose the 1919 World Series.

Since writing the script 11 years ago, Sayles grappled with the common wisdom that baseball movies are hard to get right, that not enough moviegoers are caught up in the daily melodrama of box scores and broadcasts and going out to the ball park.

However, the production of "The Natural" a few years back and this summer's success of "Bull Durham" may indicate that baseball is an excellent vehicle for telling American stories. "It's like a western," Sayles said recently. "Even though there haven't been as many baseball movies, baseball is familiar to people."

Watching "Eight Men Out,"
even a moviegoer who doesn't know a double play from a dou-bleheader will feel the bond between the naïve Buck Weaver (John Cusack) and his wife (Barbara Garrick) as he tells her the Series is fixed, or the tenderness between haunted Ed Cicotte (David Strathairn) and his unsuspecting wife (Maggie Renzi) as she rubs his weary arm before a game he must lose.

Baseball is still kind of the game of your youth," said Sayles, who appears in "Eight Men Out" as the sportswriter Ring Lardner. "Basketball has made some in-roads, and football, your body really just gets big enough when you're in junior high school. The corporateness of pro football, the hype, has started to get on peo-ple's nerves. They got glutted with

"But little kids play baseball first. You can imagine you're doing it like a big-leaguer. It's fun. I think little kids like rules, like rituals. The endless arguments. Dramatically, there are pauses. The pitcher's got to pitch it, the batter's got to bat it, hundreds of Sayles is hoping that non-fans in North America and Europe will follow this classic story of temptation and corruption. All eight of the "Black Sox" players were banned from the game after 1920, while the owners prospered and the gamblers like Arnold Rothstein went their separate ways. Many details were uncovered by Asinof, a novelist and former minor-league player, in his 1963 book. (Asinof plays a bit role in the film, appearing as John Heydler, president of the National League. The writer Studs Ter-kel also makes a cameo appear-

"Eliot said that, when he first started researching it, as far as he was concerned, these guys were burns; they sold out," Sayles said. "But as Eliot started to learn more, he couldn't keep this sim-plistic view any more. He felt

While other film people may have a tropism for the Hollywood hills and the nearest hot tub, Sayles still lives in Hoboken, New Jersey, and watches movies at the Secaucus mali.

From his modest office in Manbattan's garment district, he sees black and Hispanic and Oriental workers at sewing machines, and he gives a learned, passionate narrative of how the gambler Rothstein helped gangsters infiltrate the unions. ("Rothstein was a genius. He should have gotten the MacArthur grant if they had it back then," muses Sayles, who received the five-year, $170,000 fellowship for "outstandingly tal-

From Sayles's window, during a recent interview, the Black Sox have much in common with the seamstresses across the narrow street. "These guys were making more money from off-season jobs than they were playing for Charles Comiskey," he said, referring to the penurious White Sox owner. "It wasn't like most of them were coming from a college background. They were neighborhood guys who had been playing in industrial leagues against barnstorming teams. You made a conple of bucks, a keg of beer, and if you signed for the minors, they made good money off you. Yeah, you made more money in the maors, but it wasn't that much big-

They were coming from the real world and they were rough guys. When I started reading history books for my screenplay, I realized that Ring Lardner and James T. Farrell and Damon Runyon were not exaggerating. These guys were Looie the Lug. They were considered trash, and most hotels wouldn't take them.

putting it in context. Big things were happening in the country. Socially and morally, it was a lot like 1968. Automobiles were like dens of sin, Kids could go out and do things they couldn't do in the

"There was pressure to modemize, go crazy, go wild. Then you had the backlash. Prohibition. The Palmer raids. The whole ides of coming back from war. How ya gonna keep em down on the farm after they've seen Parce? All those kinds of things. I see it as a period of America going from its childhood to its adolescence.

'Adolescence can be an exciting time but it can also be a cyni-cal time. I felt like the Black Sox scandal was one of the last nails in the coffin that put America in the cynicism of the jazz age. Hey, everything is fixed. Why should I obey the law? Let's got to a speak-easy. Everybody's corrupt.' Here's a story about a team, a group of guys. This is a turning point in their lives and also in the young kids who want to see them

Adhering to the facts of Asin-of's book, Sayles shows John Cu-sack as Buck Weaver, the third baseman with a love affair with his sport, refusing to participate in the fix after sitting in on one plotting session. The screenwriter and athlete and romantic in Savles make him wish he could have written a speech for Weaver saying, "Guys, I'm not in." Or Sayles would have had Weaver going to the suspicious manager, Kid Gleason — "Not to rat on the guys, just to say, 'Stop it.

It didn't happen that way. Weaver played his heart out in the World Series loss to Cincinnati and kept his mouth shut and suffered the rest of his life for it. Sayles believes he should have been reinstated after one year. "Corruption and cynicism is not a black-and-white thing." Savies said. "It's like 'Prince of the City' or 'Serpico.' A kid who is a rookie doesn't say, 'Oh, I want to make the major leagues because in four years I can play in a World Series and sell out. A cop doesn't go to the police academy so he can arrest drug dealers and sell the drugs. A guy isn't just a burn. But he walks into a much bigger world, a bigger system, and you ask yourself, Why did he do it?"

Vartan Gregorian to Be Brown University Chief

Vartan Gregorian, the exuberant the Armenian immigrant who restored V the New York Public Library to its place at the heart of American intellectual life, has been chosen as the 16th president of Brown University, the United States' seventh oldest college located in Provi-dence, Rhode Island. The appointment returns Gregorian, 54, to the academic world he left seven years ago when he was passed over for the University of Pennsylvania presidency. In a letter to Andrew Heiskell, chairman of the library's board, and Brooke Astor, the honorary chairwoman, Gregorian said he longed to return to the career that he had pursued for 22 years? before joining the library. "I have not had the opportunity to pursue these interests during the past eight years and felt a pull to return to a calling when I know I still have much unfinished business," he said. Gregorian was born to middie-class Armenian parents in Tabriz, in northern Iran. He went to the United States to study history at Stanford University in California. From 1962-68 be taught history at San Francisco State College then moved to the University of Texas. He spent most of the 1970s at the University of Pennsylvania as a professor and admin serving first as dean of the faculty and then as provost. He was its garded as a front-running candia date for the presidency in 1980, but Sheldon Hackney was chosen.

A federal appeals court has ruled that the Boston Symphony Orches tra is not liable under a state civil rights law for canceling a 1982 per-formance by Vanessa Redgrave. The BSO said it canceled the shows because of threatened disruption by groups opposed to Redgrave's support for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Changes at the operas. Sir John Tooley, general director for the last 18 years at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, has retired. Too ley, 64, said: "I've had the best job in the world.". . Pleare Bergé, chief executive officer of Yves Saint Laurent, has been named to head the Paris Opera. He will manage the new Opera-Bastille, now under construction, the current Opera, which is to be devoted to dance, and the Opera Comique whose future is uncertain.
